

What is Anthropology?

Anthropology is the study of humans, past and present, focusing on understanding our origins, cultures, and societies. It explores how people live, communicate, and interact with each other and their environments.

Four Major Sub-fields of Anthropology

ARCHAEOLOGY

- investigates past human societies through material remains such as artifacts and structures.
- provides insights into history and human evolution, beneficial for history, art history and geography majors.

BIOLOGICAL anthropology

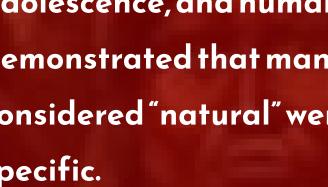

- focuses on human biology, evolution and primates to understand human variation and adaptation.
- complements majors in biology, pre-med and nursing by studying human anatomy, genetics and health.

LINGUISTIC anthropology

- studies human language, its evolution and its role in shaping culture and social interactions.
- enhances communication skills and understanding of language diversity, beneficial for majors in linguistics, communication, and education.

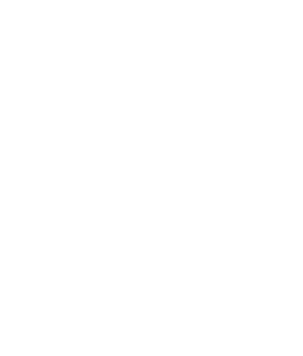

CULTURAL anthropology

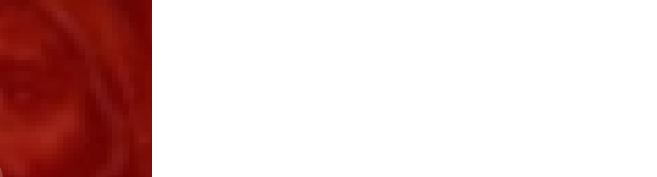

- studies societies and cultures across the world, examining social patterns, beliefs and practices.
- enhances understanding of human behaviour and diversity, valuable for majors in sociology, psychology and international studies.

Margaret Mead,

- A Renowned cultural Anthropologist

- Not just only a cultural anthropologists, she was a prolific writer, speaker and educator who conducted extensive fieldwork in the South Pacific focusing on Samoa, Papua New Guinea and Bali.

- She used anthropology to challenge cultural norms and societal assumptions about gender, adolescence, and human behavior. She demonstrated that many beliefs considered "natural" were culturally specific.

Discover Anthropology
at the friendliest campus in the South

Here's why you should join
JSU Anthropology program !!

- Professional Development:

Gain hands-on experience through fieldwork, research projects, and internships.

- Interdisciplinary Approach:

Anthropology complements various majors, enhancing your career prospects.

- Community Engagement:

Engage with local and global communities, making a meaningful impact.

- Access state-of-the-art labs, libraries, and learning spaces designed to inspire.

Jacksonville State University

(256) 782-5781
1602, 700 Pelham Rd N,
Jacksonville, AL 36265

